EFFECTING READJUSTMENT.

How the railroads of the country intend to make their next move in behalf of the inevitable readjustment is indicated by the notification which has been given to certain of the employees that reductions in the wage schedules must be made and fixing dates for conferences. This move has been made after many thousands have been idle and after efforts have been made to get sufficient operating income to keep the roads going and secure the return to which the roads are entitled under the transportation act.

Putting up the rates has resulted in a falling off of business. The large number of idle cars and the entire slump cannot be attributed to the higher freight rates, because transportation business has been affected by the general industrial situation, but higher rates have certainly not served to encourage business, and the idea of attempting to increase them further seems out of the question. Such a move would simply mean driving away what business remains and therefore increasing the idleness among the employees of railroads. Under such conditions it would make no difference how high the rate of pay was those who had no work would be worse off than they would be to participate in the readjustment by accepting a reduction in the present wage scales and keeping the wheels turning.

Thus when the railroads inform the men that there must be reductions it comes after other methods for meeting conditions have failed, and the method of presenting the matter in accord with the national agreements which the national labor board refused to dissolve. The purpose is to have the roads and the men look at cold facts and figures and agree among themselves upon the way to meet them. If it is impossible to reach an agreement appeal can be made to the national board when that body will hear and determine what should be done on the evidence presented. The roads and themselves driven to action and they are seeking to effect a cut in expenditures through wage reductions the same as most every line of industry has, and doing it in accord with agreement.

FIGHTING THE MOTHS.

In the state of Rhode Island two bills are before the legislature seeking appropriations of $25,000 for the suppression of the gypsy and brownish moths. More than half of the appropriations are for the purpose of concentrated efforts in one town. If the facts warrant such an expenditure it would appear that the conditions in that single town are not only serious but a decided menace to the rest of the state and neighboring commonwealths.

It is unfortunately the case too often that sections which are threatened or actually overrun with such pests fail to take the necessary steps to protect themselves through individual effort before conditions get to such a stage that outside help has to be called for. This is, however, frequently noted and Rhode Island is not the only state where it can be found.

The fact of the matter is that too much attention cannot be given to the destruction of such moths which, if they are not fought, will raise havoc among trees and shrubs. Perhaps it may seem that $25,000 for one town for such a purpose is a large sum, but the indications are that it is a large job that must be tackled if protection is going to be given to others, and it would be far cheaper and easier to fight the pest in that one town than to wait until it had become well distributed over the state.

Appropriations of this kind come hard when economy is the watchword of state legislatures. At other times less might be thought of such a proposition, but inasmuch as neglect has led to the present conditions possible the continuance of it can be expected to make them far worse. Eradication now, or the checking of the spread, would therefore be a good stroke in behalf of economy in the long run. But whether Rhode Island appropriates what is sought or not there will be a large burden resting upon the shoulders of every farmer and land owner to put forth his best efforts to strike at the pest wherever it is seen. A general effort along such lines would show excellent results.

NATIONAL FISH DAY.

There is no way of course of telling how many paid any attention to the national fish day, which was proclaimed for Wednesday and its observance urged upon the people of the entire country. Some accidentally observed it. Others had fish because they wanted it, while there were those who were encouraged to take advantage of special offers in the way of fish for that occasion. The fish has its day but whether it will be possible to awaken much interest in the one day observance throughout the country is a question.

If the observance was prompted by the fact that there is a large amount of fish on the market over and above the normal requirements there ought to be no difficulty in moving that surplus provided there is a desire to move it and a determination to take loss rather than to offer inducements. When it is reported that something more than three-quarters of a million pounds of fish were condemned in New York city last year because it was unfit for human consumption it can be appreciated that efforts to move such fish were too long delayed that those who desire to give the trade the benefit of that waste and it is reasonable to suppose that the maintenance of prices was to a large degree responsible for the spoiling of such fish quite as much as the price of their commodities at various times has been bolstered up by the deliberate destruction of surplus fish that would have had a depressing effect upon the market.

struction of surplus fish that would have had a depressing effect upon the market. National fish day, whether for the purpose of moving a surplus or with the idea of giving the fish an additional amount of advertising may make the appeal. It properly placed it should serve to direct increased attention to fish as a food and to new kinds of fish that are being put on the market. Right cannot be lost, however, of the importance of making fish attractive in ways other than those through an appeal to the appetite.

A BARE DECISION.

Recognition is given to the responsibility and the power that rests with the own circle when the moving picture industry lets it be known that it has decided to insist upon a cleaning up of the modern picture. It is to be observed that this is not an expression of opinion which has been given at this time just for the purpose of throwing out the track of the efforts which have been made under a different direction to accomplish the same thing. There have been insistent demands for a better ownership and it is to be realized with some of the picture makers being either that either someone amounts to nothing or else those who are entrusted with it are not attending to business. Where such laxity prevails, wherever the responsibility lies, it can be anticipated that there will be demands for better conditions.

By the action of the moving picture industry it becomes evident that they realize that if they do not undertake their own housecleaning and insist upon the elimination of the pictures which are regarded as dangerous to the welfare of the public they can expect that it will be done by others and in a way that would not be as pleasing to them. They realize that they should not have permitted the pictures to get out of bounds the way they have but it will be decided by the credit, now that they admit the situation, if they put forth their best endeavors in a determined effort to make a cleanup that will be permanent. Anything that moves to be only temporary will simply mean further manifestations of public indignation and new attempts at restriction and regulation. This is what it is desired to avoid and what will be prevented if the moving picture industry conscientiously interprets the policy which it has adopted.

Likewise it can be appreciated that by such action the picture industry for better pictures there will be an appeal to much larger numbers and a gratifying obstacle placed in the way of conditions that point and lead to evil.

IMPOSING THE PENALTIES.

What the allied nations have done so the result of the failure of the London conference and the movement of troops further into Germany for the control of three cities in an important industrial region to be a penalty for the failure of Germany to meet the demands of the allies for reparations. It clearly sets forth, contrary to what Germany has been inclined to believe, that the allies are thoroughly agreed in their demands and also in the steps that will be necessary to recover their losses from Germany.

Unwilling throughout has Germany been to recognize that it could be held responsible. It has protested against the allies' demands, frowned upon the idea that it could be made a party and has flatly maintained by certain of the leaders that the terms would never be met. To a certain degree that was the attitude of the German delegates who went to London. The counter propositions showed it and if they were surprised when the conference was terminated and the penalties were imposed in advance they were imposed there was no one to blame but themselves. How they expected they could bluff the allies into the acceptance of such plans as they presented is beyond comprehension. The first step was too ridiculous for the allies to bother examining. The second, proposed after it was said there was no other, indicated that the delegates from Berlin anticipated that they were entitled to receive far different attention than the representatives of a vanquished nation. To have accepted the five year offer would have meant the bringing of the whole matter up again after that period and allowed new conditions to have their effect in reaching a further decision.

There was no chance that such could be accepted. Germany even wanted the allies to disregard the penalties in Upper Silesia. The imposition of the penalties should result in bringing Germany to its senses but it doesn't necessarily mean that the chance has been denied it to accept the terms and thus bring about the lifting of the penalties and the recovery of the opportunity to work out its own problems.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

March is certainly furnishing all sorts of inducements for getting the fishing tackle ready.

With 192 earthquakes abating in six days in southern China someone must have had his foot on the cat's paw.

The man on the corner says: It is a pal-sophy but a great time to be a philosopher and accept what is provided.

Germany should realize that the bill will be larger by forcing the allies to put it in the hands of a collecting agency.

It will not be many days now before the home airships are being shot down by high and promising their early years are.

Germany in its counter proposal doubled the original but it didn't start high enough in the beginning to make any impression.

Had Germany won the war there wouldn't have been any opportunity allowed for the allies to present superior proposals.

How like the Germans advance in that of the allied troops when they try to cause as little friction as possible among the people.

Every time a coal concern declares a dividend of 15 per cent the community wonders what it would have been had the winter been a severe one.

There is considerable foreign comment on the president's inaugural address, but it should be remembered that it was a message to the people of the United States.

Had Germany only stopped to think back in 1914 that it was possible to lose, and anticipated the bill under such a situation, there might not have been any war.

From the way in which they are shedding blood it might be supposed that Panama and Costa Rica didn't believe in sanity when it comes to adjustment of quarrels.

With Detroit having appropriated nearly three-quarters of a million for relief work among unemployed, not all in that important war industry center could have anticipated 1921.

HER LINE OF CHATTER

The sad faced rooming house chambermaid opened the roomer's door slightly, threw a gloomy countenance through the opening and gave a deep sigh.

"You ain't going out this morning, I suppose?" she said. "Well, it seems like home folks had it pretty soft these days. You was home all day yesterday, wasn't you? I never had no such luck myself. It's work, work, work, all the time for me day in and day out."

"Oh, you do?" Well, of course, if a person's got a mind to call it work just to sit in their room and write on a baby typewriter, it's their own business and I ain't got a word to say. If there's one thing I know how to do it's mind my own business.

"I don't guess you're doing it, but I come in and kind of watch things up, you know. And then if you take a notion to go out it won't take me long to get at it. You see, I know the person who's got the whole pile of things to do. I have, if they can't get at their work when they're ready to do it, it's awful hard on them. Not that I'd ever say anything to them, but I can't help complaining no matter what."

"My, your talk is awful awful wet. I guess I better hang it up by the heels and go to bed. I don't want to stay if I had somebody to wait on me like that sometimes. I suppose you was taking a bath again this morning. You take one most every day, don't you?"

"Sure it's your own business, and I ain't the kind to say nothing about things that don't concern me, but I don't hold with taking baths all the time. It wears a person! Maybe that's what makes you look so much kind of tired. I don't hold with you first come here."

"Is that so? Well, it's no wonder you're so skinny, then. But it's your own business, of course, and we can't say a word to you. I guess you're right. It's no use trying to change their ways, I guess."

"Is that a picture of your beau over the table? Ain't that a picture?"

"Oh, just your brother? I might of known. Beans is scarce around these days. If a person ain't real young and real looking they might as well be a picture of a dead man. I've thought sometimes if you'd kind of fix yourself up more you'd be a lot better looking than what you appear to be. It would be an awful pile of trouble, though, and I don't know as it would be worth while. When you don't know how to make up, you give up any advice, though. I'd be the last person in the world to expect anything of nobody, and, anyway, I guess I learned my lesson not to try to do nothing for nobody when I used all the time to be telling my sister to fix herself up. She's a real looker if she'd fix her hair kind of different and get herself some decent clothes. Why, she acted more like a queen than anybody else in the house and she was really ugly about it."

"I wasn't that she didn't pay enough for her clothes—she was just as extravagant as she could be—but it wasn't like she always got things that her look worse than what the Lord intended she should, and she wasn't no queen. I never got no thanks for anything I ever done for her that way, so after a while I quit. Now I just leave her go her way and I go mine."

"But it kind of turns me against doing things for folks and I come to the conclusion everybody is better off when they don't expect nothing of nobody. I guess you won't mind if I just kind of brush up around your chair, will you? It puts a person back in their work something like that. I know how to wait till everybody gets out the house, especially when you can't never count on whether they're going to work or not. I can't stand it. I won't raise no more dust than what I have to, I thought."

"Well, it wouldn't hardly pay me to do that, but I'll just kind of dust first and then maybe you'll be gone and I can do my sweeping."

"No, I know that, but when a person's got so much work to do as what I have."

"Well, you can do as you're mind to about that. I can work pretty good for you, but I'll just kind of dust first and then maybe you'll be gone and I can do my sweeping."

"No, I know that, but when a person's got so much work to do as what I have."
